

The 50x15 Vision: A Connected Global Population

AMD's 50x15 Initiative is a bold and far-reaching effort to connect half of the world's population to the Internet by 2015. We're partnering with businesses and governments to increase information access so that developing countries can grow in education, economics, and entertainment.

AMD and a growing network of partners have launched efforts in India, Brazil, China, and the Caribbean. This year we'll continue the progress – in parts of Russia and throughout Africa and Central America, and beyond.

Equally important, the 50x15 Initiative provides an economic engine for all who contribute ideas and innovations that power the program.
